TENER SOUNDS KEYNOTE OF VIGOROUS CAMPAIGN

Republican Nominee for Governor Defines Vital Issues.

MAKES STRONG ADDRESS

His Colleagues on Ticket also in Attendance at Notification Meeting at Pittsburg Saturday—Party Workers Enthusiatic.

John K. Tener, the Republican nominee for Governor, sounded the keynote of his campaign, when, at the notification meeting, at Pittsburg, on Saturday, last, he declared his interest in and determination to advance legislation providing among other things, for the following:

Safe guarding the public health.
Improvement of country roads.
A State-wide highway.
Preservation of the water supply.
Further perfection of pure food laws.
Revised school law and simplified system.

In a word, Mr. Tener declared that he stood firmly on every plank in the Republican platform.

The notification meeting was attended by a large and enthusiastic delegation of Republicans from all parts of the State.

John M. Reynolds, Henry Houck and Charles F. Wright, Mr. Tener's colleagues on this ticket, also were in attendance and delivered addresses. Mr Tener, in accepting the nomination for Governor, said:

"To be unanimously selected by a convention of my fellow-citizens representing the Republicans of all sections of this State is indeed an honor of which I am deeply sensible.

"Its acceptance involves serious duties and responsibilities which I fully appreciate. The record of the Republican party and its present principles and pledges furnish a platform upon which every thoughtful and patriotic citizen safely can stand.

"Pennsylvania is today pre-eminent in all that tends to the welfare of the people. The enjoyment of life, liberty and property are secure and our citizens are not only untrammeled but aided by the administration of governmental affairs in every practical way in the promotion of their prosperity and the pursuit of happiness. When we realize that from the time of Curtin to Stuart the State has been governed almost continuously by representatives of the Republican party, executing Republican principles, we have a right to be proud in its achievements.

"Long and rapid strides in the march of humanity toward a higher and better civilization have been made in the last half century. This is especially true of human government and the Republican party has ever been apace with, or in the lead, in the progress thus made. During all of this time every platform of our party, national and State, has declared for the betterment of the condition of our people and these pledges have been faithfully fulfilled. The platform of the convention which you represent contains declarations of principles and assurances intended to be further helpful. Without a single exception I fully approve this platform and declaration of principles. If I am elected I will do all in my power to put into full operation its recommendations by proposing and urging the enactment of the necessary legislation to accomplish the same.

"Coming, as a I do, from a rural county, I appreciate the importance of good roads. Much progress has been made in that direction. Much more remains to be done. The consensus of opinion, in which I heartily concur, is that there should be a more comprehensive system of State-wide road improvement and that all the highways of the Commonwealth shall be speedily and permanently improved.

The preservation of the purity of food, water and the public health is of vital importance and the most careful consideration demands the strict enforcement of all laws relating thereto.

"For many years Pennsylvania has led all other States in her liberal support of the cause of popular education. I agree with the declarations of our platform that our school code be revised and simplified to the end that our State shall not only be the most liberal in this direction, but shall also have the best schools and the best school system obtainable.

"The government of a State like ours is a great business proposition, and the several accounts should be so guarded and audited that no loss or leakage of

DR. IRVIN'S ESCAPE

His Auto Skids Over 10 Foot Embankment Near Julian.

Dr. W. U. Irvin and two young men, one of them his son, had a miraculous escape from serious injury and possibly death on Saturday, last, when his automomobile skidded off the road near Julian slid to the bottom of a ten-foot embankment. Although the auto turned on its side, at the bottom of the embankment, all three occupants escaped without injury. One of the young men had an arm slightly bruised, but this was all. The auto was more or less damaged.

The accident was caused by the muddy roads, resulting from Saturday's rain. Dr. Irvin's car, a Ford, had no chains on the rear wheels. Without warning the auto suddenly started to skid and before Dr. Irvin could realize the danger and bring the car to a stop it had swerved to one side of the road and down over the steep embankment. Fortunately the machine did not turn completely upside down. Had it done so probably all three occupants would have been killed.

Dr. Irvin telephoned to Keichline's garage, at Bellefonte, and Mr. Keichline, with an assistant, went to the scene of the accident. By means of a rope and tackle and with the assistance of about twenty spectators, the auto was pulled onto the road. It was then towed to Dr. Irvin's home at Unionville.

During the mix-up Dr. Irvin's eye glasses were knocked off. After the auto had been restored to the road he found the glasses, which had not been damaged.

DENIES HE'S DEAD

William Bullock, of Port Matilda, Not a Suicide, as Reported.

William Bullock, of Port Matilda, denies that he is dead. He asserts that he knows whereof he speaks. Eye witnesses declare that William is telling the truth. Hence his indignation over published statements in the Tyrone "Herald" and Philipsburg "Journal" and other newspapers to the effect that on Sunday last he committed suicide by drinking carbolic acid.

What William drank was something other than carbolic acid. Later he visited the campmeeting, near Port Matilda. When he arrived there he had several bottles with him. All bore similar wrappers. He drank the contents of two bottles. It proved that they contained Jamaica ginger. William tried the third bottle. It contained carbolic acid. William didn't like its odor. If any of the acid got beyond his lips it was not enough to do any special harm.

Dave Gingery, of Martha, at once removed William to the office of Dr. J. A. Thompson. The latter gave William one glance and remarked that if he had swallowed the contents of the carbolic acid bottle the end was in sight. Not having swallowed the acid William didn't die, but he might as well have so far as concerned the Tyrone "Herald" and the Philipsburg "Journal." Both newspapers described William's tragic death. William says such yarns are important if true.

Burned By Matches.

While playing with matches in front of his home, on Monday afternoon, Neil Waite, the four-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. George Waite, burned himself, about the waist and chest. Owing to the little fellow's quickness in extinguishing the flames, he was not severely injured.

JUDGE ORVIS REVERSED BY SUPERIOR COURT

His Decision in Spring Township School Case Overruled.

AFFECTS MANY SCHOOLS

A School District Maintaining a High School Cannot Be Compelled to Pay For Educating Children in an Adjoining District.

The Pennsylvania Superior Court last week handed down an opinion, reversing Judge Orvis, of this county, who in January, 1909, rendered a decision to the effect that the school board of Spring township pay the tuition of certain children from that township attending the Bellefonte High School.

The question involved, was this:

"Whether a school district maintaining a High School is compelled to pay for educating children in the High School of an adjoining district?"

Lawyers Clement Dale and A. A. Dale represented the school board of Spring township.

The plaintiffs were A. C. Grove, T. M. Barnhart, William Woods and Daniel Showalter. Their counsel was J. C. Meyer. Judge Orvis' opinion was appealed to the Superior Court and finally was reversed.

The decision of the Superior Court is of State-wide importance, all similar cases arising thus far or which may arise, being likewise affected. Because of its importance the progress of the case was closely followed by State Superintendent of Public Instruction Schaffer. The Superior Court opinion follows:

"Upon the petition of certain citizens and tax payers of the Township of Spring the Court of Quarter Sessions granted a rule upon the school directors of the township 'to show cause why they should not consent to enter into an arrangement with the school board of Bellefonte Borough for the admission of petitioners' children in the schools of the Borough of Bellefonte, including the high schools of said borough, at the expense of the district of Spring Township school district, and why said directors of Spring Township school district should not promptly make settlement with Bellefonte school district for tuition, cost of books &c., accrued and now due and payable.' An answer was filed by the respondents in which they admitted that they had declined to pay for the schooling of certain children at the Bellefonte high school because the respondent district had established a township high school at Pleasant Gap for the education of all advanced pupils in the township of Spring, and placed said school in charge of a competent teacher, a graduate of a chartered college; that should the respondent district agree to educate the children enumerated in the petition at the Bellefonte high school, it would be a precedent for a large number of other children to apply, who live near Bellefonte, and thus destroy the usefulness of their own township high school; that there are but twenty seven pupils in the high school of Spring Township, and that room for double that number could be made, if necessary.

"After other averments as to the number and location of the schools of the district, the cost of maintaining them, the indebtedness of the district, and the number of pupils attending the schools of the district, as well as of those attending the schools of Bellefonte, for whose education the respondent district was paying, the answer concluded with the averment, 'that in establishing the township high school at Pleasant Gap, your respondents took into consideration that there was the largest number of pupils living in and around Pleasant Gap who were ready for the high school training and also that there was a suitable building at Pleasant Gap for the high school; that in establishing the schools of Spring Township, as well as the high school, your respondents exercised the wisest discretion possible and that their conclusions are arrived at after mature deliberation.' After hearing upon depositions, the Court made absolute the rule, and from that order this appeal is taken.

"It is seen from the above reference to the petition and answer that the action of the Court involved a review and setting aside of the discretion of the school directors and the substitution of the Court's discretion therefor. The counsel for the apellee, while not denying that a discretion is vested in the school directors with reference to the subject-matter of the petition, contends that it is a reviewable discretion and may be over-ruled if unreasonably or arbitrarily exercised. But before considering the question, whether under the evidence there was a clear abuse of discretion resulting in failure to perform official duty, we deem it important to determine whether the Court of Quarter Sessions had jurisdiction. This question is fairly raised by the fourth and fifth assignments of error. The opinion of the learned judge rests the jurisdiction of the Court upon the Act of 1854, and it would seem from the form of the prayer of the petition, that the petitioners sought to enforce performance of the duty imposed by paragraph IX, section 23, of the Act of May 8, 1854, which provides that 'if it shall be found that on account of great distance from, or difficulty of access to the proper school house in any district, some of the pupils thereof could be more conveniently accommo-

ALL BUT 2 MEMBERS OF OLD ZION BAND LIVING

Of 15 Who Were Charter Members 34 Years ago, 13 Survive.

FAMOUS ORGANIZATION

Most of the Old "Boys" Still Live at Zion and Pleasant Gap—Their First Instruments were Purchased Through Joseph Bros.

A few evenings ago several former residents of Zion happened to meet in front of Carpeneto's store, on Allegheny street, and in chatting in a reminiscent manner one of the group remarked:

"Did it ever occur to you that of the fifteen charter members of the famous old Zion band, organized in 1876, all but two are living."

The question at once excited the curiosity of all present. That fifteen men, all from in and about one community, Zion, should be brought together thirty-four years ago and after such a long period all but two should be living seemed at first, though to be incredible. Nevertheless it is true.

Everybody hereabouts will at once recall the old Zion band. In its day it was one of the best bands in the county. Probably had not Henry Kline been elected Sheriff several years ago the band would be in existence today. He was its leader at the time he became Sheriff. When he removed to Bellefonte the band dissolved and since has existed only as a pleasant memory.

The old Zion band, of which thirteen of the fifteen charter members are still living, was organized in the summer of 1876. The two charter members who have since died were A. J. Swartz, whose death occured at Pleasant Gap, and Harrison Kline, who lived at Nigh Bank and who subsequently became County Treasurer. Mr. Swartz played a cornet and Mr. Kline played bass.

Of the thirteen charter members still living, several have drifted to different places while the others have remained at or nearby Zion. Perry Gentzel, residing on the old Gentzel farm at Zion, was the leader of the band and played a cornet. Joseph Alters, who played a cornet, then lived at Zion but now is engaged in business at Bellefonte. Another who played a cornet was Henry Twitmyer, then living at Zion but now a resident of Pleasant Gap. "Ben," Gentzel, now residing at Bellefonte, played a bass. Jacob Stine, still residing at Zion, played a baritone, and Henry Lesh, also still residing at Zion, played tenor. Another tenor player was J. N. Brooks, now a resident at Pleasant Gap but then living at Gilltown. There were three alto players—Elmer Swartz, who still lives at Pleasant Gap; Edward Gephart, now a resident of Clearfield county, and Elmer Johnson, at present living at Altoona. Foster Sharer, who played the bass drum, still lives at Zion Foster Jodon, who handled the sticks for the tenor drum, still resides at Nigh-Bank, and Joel S. Royer, who played the cymbals, still resides at Zion.

At the first meeting Daniel Lesh, an old enthusiast, was elected an honorary member of the band. He walked several miles to attend every meeting. Mr. Lesh died a number of years ago. Professor Wilse Reitmyer, of Lewisburg, was the first instructor. He died about ten years ago.

The first set of instruments used by the old band were of brass and were purchased through Joseph Bros. & Co. Subsequently a second set were purchased. These were of silver and of the famous Cortois type. They were purchased through J. Howard Foote, of New York.

MRS. DREESE DIES

Sudden Death on Monday of Well Known Resident of Lemont.

A sad and sudden death was that at noon, on Monday, when Mrs. Irvin J. Dreese passed away at her late home, at Lemont. Although she had been in failing health for several years it was believed that she was gradually becoming stronger and that her complete recovery was but a matter of time. On Monday, however, she suffered a sinking spell and a few hours later she passed away.

Mrs. Dreese was a splendid woman. By a wide circle of friends she was loved and admired and the news of her sudden death was a distinct shock. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Pierce Lytle, of Pine Grove Mills and was aged about 58 years. A devout Christian, she was an active member of the Presbyterian church. After an illness of about two weeks, Mrs. E. E. Houck died on Saturday evening at her late home, at Tyrone. Announcement of her death came as a shock to her numerous friends, both at Tyrone and in the Buffalo Run Valley, where she formerly resided. About two weeks ago Mrs. Houck was preparing for an outing in the country, when she was prostrated by the heat. She fainted while walking up stairs, and falling sustained an injury below the right knee. This developed erysipelas. For several days it seemed that she was responding to treatment, but subsequently she suffered a relapse and gradually became weaker until she died. Mrs. Houck was formerly Miss Margaret Minnie Krider, and was born in Buffalo Run Valley, this county, February 2, 1871, making her age 39 years, 5 months and 21 days. With her parents she removed to Krider Valley, Huntingdon county, where she resided until her marriage, in 1890, to Mr. Houck, at which time she made her home at Tyrone. Surviving are a husband and four children, as follows: LeRoy, Chester, Ronald and Isabelle. Her aged mother, Mrs. Annie Krider, and three brothers, H. Alton, Milton and William M., also survive. Mrs. Houck was a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church. Interment was made at Warriors-Mark, in the Baptist cemetery, on Tuesday.

Foley, then engaged in the iron business in Centre County They moved to Clearfield county in the fifties, residing first at Luthersburg, and afterwards at Grampion Hills. They came to Clearfield in the sixties and resided here ever since. Her husband William C. Foley, was elected Associate Judge of this county in 1871 and served the full term of five years. Judge Foley died in 1887. Since her husband's death Mrs. Foley lived on the homestead on Front street with her daughter Mrs. Heichhold and family. She is survived by four daughters, Mrs. William V. Wright, Mrs. Clara McCord, Mrs. W. H. Patterson and Mrs. J. L. R. Heichhold, all of Clearfield. The eldest daughter, wife of the late Hon. MAN AND WOMAN IN FIGHT WITH PITCHFORKS

George G. Hastings And Mrs. Frank Fry In Lively Scrap.

SQUIRE DIVIDES COSTS

Double Hearing Results From Troubles of Owner and Former Tenant of Buffalo Run Farm—Justice Refuses to Send Case to Court.

Two hearings before Squire William H. Musser, on Monday, marked the culmination of a series of quarrels between George G. Hastings and Frank Fry, of Buffalo Run, one of the clashes being featured with a fight between Mr. Hastings and Mrs. Fry, each armed with a pitchfork. It was testified at the second hearing that Mrs. Fry had jabbed a pitchfork into Mr. Hastings' leg and that she had also clubbed him over the head and arms with the fork handle. It was also alleged that Mr. Hastings has jabbed his pitchfork into Mrs. Fry's leg and back.

The first hearing was on a charge of assault and battery, brought by Mr. Hastings against Mr. Fry. The second charge was one of assault and battery brought against Mrs. Fry. Squire Musser disposed of the first case by dividing the costs equally between Mr. Hastings and Mr. Fry. The second case he settled by placing one-third of the costs on Mr. Hastings and the remaining two thirds on Mr. and Mrs. Fry. He refused to send the cases to court.

It developed at the hearing that Mr. Fry had until recently been a tenant farmer for Mr. Hastings and that he returned a short time ago to cut his grain. Mr. Hastings served a written notice on him that the grain should be threshed in the tenant barn and not in the field. This led to a warm argument and finally, it was alleged, Mr. Fry struck Mr. Hastings. Both then started to the public road to fight it out, but before arriving there concluded to let things stand without further hostilities.

Mr. Fry then hauled his grain into the tenant barn and shortly after this Mr. Hastings put some hay into the same barn and on top of Mr. Fry's grain. It was this occurrence that precipitated the second quarrel and the fight with pitchforks. Mrs. Fry accompanied her husband to the tenant barn, where they discovered the Hastings hay on the grain. Mr. Hastings was present and Mrs. Fry upbraided him for what he had done. In the mix-up that followed, each wielded a pitchfork.

A large number of witnesses for each side to the controversy attended the hearings.

MICHIGAN LAKES

Some of Them, Though Very Deep, Have Been Entirely Grown Over.

Five thousand lakes of all sizes is the proud total claimed by the state of Michigan. Some of them are mysterious bodies, having neither inlet nor outlet, nor so far as can be discovered by sounding, bottom.

Many of the smaller lakes, according to Fur News, are slowly growing over and have wide margins or tough sod that will support the weight of a man, although merely resting on water or a thin mud of unknown depth.

These margins tremble to the tread and quiver for many feet around when stepped upon. There are instances where a lake has become entirely overgrown and for so long a period that the surface becomes solid and the existance of water underneath is unsuspected.

The Pere Marquette Railroad Company, when building a branch between Grand Rapids and Lansing returned to the work one morning to find that several rods of roadbed had disappeared during the night and a considerable lake had taken its place. Thousands of feet of timber and many car loads of earth were dumped in before bottom was found and the road had anything like a firm foundation. The pressure of the displaced water heavest the earth and cracked it for some distance around, tilting large forest trees, some of which fell.

Water came up through these crevices, bringing eyeless fish, both bass and bullheads, convincing certain former skeptics that when any organ of sense or locomotion falls into disuse it degenerates and finally is lost. Probably these fish were the descendants of others that had lived in darkness for ages.

A small lake in Bowne Township, supposed by the rural folk to be bottomless, swallowed up a full half acre at one gulp a few years ago, and where the slide took place the water is apparently as deep as ever.

In the extreme western edge of Ionia County there is a little lake of about three acres in area; it is without any visible feeders or outlet. It is surrounded by woods on the high land, while its margin is grown up to shrubs and flags and grasses peculiar to the ordinary swamp.

This is another of the mysterious water holes, termed bottomless, one party having sounded 150 feet without finding bottom. The water is red and unfit to drink and millions of minute particles of vegetable matter are held in suspension and are in commotion as if stirred by force of an undercurrent or boiling springs.

The only fish are big-mouthed bass an bullheads. For all that the water seems to be so swampy in character it does not detract from the flavor of the fish, probably owing to the fact of its being of better quality in its lower depths.

Nagley's Lake, in Kent County, is formed like a great horseshoe and is about seven miles in circumference. It has been sounded in one place and showed a depth of 250 feet. It has but one insignificant feeder and the natural evaporation must be considerable, and yet it has an outlet which flows water sufficient for power to drive a saw mill and grist mill, proving that it is fed by heavy flowing springs that man has never seen. The water is clear blue and cold, and the bottom is hard marl lime.

'Foley Kidney Pills Have Cured Me'

The above is a quotation from a letter written by H. M. Winkler, Evansville, Ind. "I contracted a severe case of kidney trouble. My back gave out and pained me. I seemed to have los all strength and ambition; was bothered with dizzy spells, my head would swim and specks float before my eyes. I took Foley Kidney Pills regularly and am now perfectly well and feel like a new man. Foley Kidney Pills have cured me. sold by C. M. Parrish.

GREAT CROPS IN TEXAS

Those Already Made Reach the Stupendous Sum of $120,000,000.

The total value of the crops already made in Texas, a good portion of which have already been marketed, will reach the stupendous sum of $120,000,000 as a conservative estimate. A few years ago there was scarcely a crop which was ready for sale in Texas until the cotton came on in the fall. The figures above do not include the cotton crop.

These figures are just another illustration of the rapidity with which Texas is coming to the front as an agricultural state. Of the crops already harvested the bulk was furnished by Southwest Texas and the Panhandle, sections a few years ago devoted almost entirely to the grazing of cattle.

The bringing in of such a vast amount of money to Texas during the spring makes times much better and adds greatly to the general prosperity of the country.

The spring crops already harvested or made are as follows:

Onions, 2700 cars, selling for an average of $450 a car, or $1,215,000.

Cabbages, 500 cars, selling for an average of $200 a car, or $100,000.

Miscellaneous garden truck, 300 cars, selling for an average of $200 a car, or $75,000.

Irish potatoes, 1000 cars, selling for an average of $300 a car, or $300,000.

Corn, 210,000,000 bushels, valued at 50 cents a bushel, or $105,000,000.

Wheat, 13,000,000 bushels, valued at 75c a bushel, or $9,750,000.

Oats, 5,000,000 bushels, valued at 40c a bushel, or $2,000,000.

If the vast wealth that is coming every spring from the soil of the state and enriching the farmers is to be accurately estimated, to the figures cited must be added the great amount of dairy and poultry products which are shipped. There are many points in Texas where chickens, eggs, turkeys and butter are shipped during the early winter and spring by the car lots, many thousands of dollars being realized from this source alone.

Despite the fact that the ranches are rapidly giving way to the farms, there are still a large number of cattle raised in Texas, and during the spring cattle went out of this section by the train load for more than forty-five days, the railroads being taxed to their fullest capacity to handle the vast number. This brings back to Texas during the spring several million dollars.

Since the farmers have turned their attention from corn and cotton, Texas has become a twelve-month-a-year corn country, some agricultural products being put on during every day of the year. This has done more than any other state on a cash basis.

The merchant is no longer called upon to carry his customers for nine months on a credit basis and as a result he can sell his goods at a cheaper figure, and all this adds to the general prosperity of every section.

The farmer has ceased to be a one-crop man. Cotton may still be king, but the homage of the tiller of the soil has been diverted in part at least to garden truck, to feed stuffs, to fruits, vegetables, poultry, hogs and fine stock.

THE TRUE TEST.

Tried in Bellefonte, It Has Stood the Test.

The hardest test is the test of time, and Doan's Kidney Pills have stood it well in Bellefonte Kidney sufferers can hardly ask for stronger proof than the following:

Mrs. E. J. Hogarth, W. High St., Bellefonte, Pa., says: "I suffered for years from a weakness of my kidneys, accompanied by a constant, dull backache. I used plasters and liniments, but found no relief and I was suffering severely when Doan's Kidney Pills were brought to my attention. If I took cold, it settled in my kidneys and at such times, the secretions from these organs passed too frequently. Reading about Doan's Kidney Pills, I decided to give them a trial and procured a box from Green's Pharmacy Co. Soon after commencing their use, the backache and other difficulties disappeared and my kidneys no longer troubled me. I am grateful to Doan's Kidney Pills for what they have done for me." (Statement given Oct. 21, 1907.)

Two years later. Mrs. Hogarth was interviewed on Nov. 22, 1909 and she said: "I am pleased to confirm my former endorsement of Doan's Kidney Pills. I have had but little trouble from my kidneys since I was cured in 1907."

LIME IN AGRICULTURE

Two Large Farms Yielding Splendid Crops.

Probably the best demonstration of the advantages in the use of lime for agricultural purposes has been seen on two farms of different nature in this vicinity.

D. S. Kloss owns and cultivates what is known as the McMullen farm at Scalp Level, Sinking valley. He bought this farm, of about 230 acres, several years ago when it was thoroughly worn out and barely produced enough to feed the stock used in farming. He took hold of the farm in an intelligent way and immediately resorted to liming; during the past three years he has put probably 10,000 bushels on the farm and this year his crops show wonderful results.

He has a field of alfalfa which has yielded already this season one crop with a second crop ready to cut and a third will follow. His crop of clover and timothy is probably the finest ever raised in Sinking valley and his wheat crop is equally good. The soil is a natural limestone soil and the crops he has raised have responded to the use of lime. He has used no other fertilizer, confining himself to lime and barnyard manure.

Recently W. H. Agnew made photographic views of Mr. Kloss' various crops and they are pictures which ought to be encouragement to any farmer wanting to make a success of farming; it is clear demonstration of good judgment in liming to get the desired results.

Along the Bald Eagle valley, in the slate and shale region, where a few years ago feed had to be bought for the stock, Richard Beaston bought two small farms. Part of this land is low and quite wet. Mr. Beaston went to farming in a practical way; he discovered that red sorrel and other like weeds were unprofitable crops and he immediately applied lime. The red sorrel and weeds disappeared and this year he has as fine crops of clover and timothy as can be found any place in the country, while his grain crops are equally good, and the same may be said of other heretofore discouraged farmers in the Bald Eagle valley.

Mr. Agnew also made photographs of Mr. Beaston's crops and there is no better demonstration of what can be done with poor and undesirable land than Mr. Beaston's farms; with his good crops and overcrowded barn, he is ready to declare that liming land, and liming it well, with the assistance of barnyard manure pays and pays well.

In a few years the example set by Mr. Kloss and Mr. Beaston, if followed by farmers having unprofitable farms, will show to their satisfaction that it is not the poor land which troubles them but it is want of lime and proper treatment of the soil It takes these to get the desired results. Tyrone Herald.

Sun Scald.

In reply to numerous queries regarding the cause of the leaves of many maple shake trees turning brown this season and the remedy State Zoologist Surface says:

"The maple leaves sent us show an inorganic condition known as Sun Scald due to climatic conditions. During the spring while it was cold and rainy, the tree started a luxuriant growth and set many more leaves than it could supply with water after it became dry and warm. As a result the excessive evaporation from the leaves caused them to wither and turn brown. It now remains to remove some of the extra leaves by pruning off some of the branches that are in the worst condition, removing only small branches and also to supply more moisture to roots. If the roots are given sufficient water, this browning of foliage will stop at once, and new, fresh leaves will grow.

"This is also a good opportunity to stimulate the growth of the tree by the addition of nitrate of soda, using from one-half pound to three pounds per tree, scattered over the soil, or worked into it before watering, and applied again in about three or four weeks. If the ground can be loosened and cultivated and very frequently watered, with a little nitrate of soda occasionally added, it will help these trees more than anything else. There are no insects nor plant disease germs present."

The Bullsnake.

The bull snake, a species of pine snake inhabits the shady pine woods along the Atlantic Coast, from New Jersey to Florida, but other species are found almost everywhere, except in New England. The bull snake is quite harmless, but is a powerful constrictor. It lays eggs and feeds upon birds, rodents and eggs. It swallows an egg whole, and after the egg has passed a few inches down the throat where it forms a large swelling the serpent lifts its head, elevates its back and exerts a downward pressure until the shell breaks. Owing to a curious constriction of its epiglottis its hiss is so loud and so well-sustained as to resemble the sound of redhot iron being plunged in water. The maximum length of these snakes is 7½ feet. Their color is white, with the exception of the head and back, the former being spotted black and the latter brown.—Wide World Magazine.

PYRAMIDS IN OLD MEXICO

Structures Bigger Than Egypt's May Contain Febulous Wealth.

That several regiments of soldiers, working unknown to the world for many months, have been uncovering true pyramids, built of huge stone blocks and cement, larger than those of Egypt, is the astonishing news that has lately come from the Republic of Mexico.

That these pyramids existed in earth form has long been known to archaeologists. But it was always supposed that they were once great hills of sands, and that centuries ago—long before the time of Cortez, even they were shaped and trimmed with shovels and spades.

Removing the dust of ages past, however, the fact of their construction by human hands is now revealed, and, furthermore, almost indisputable indications have been found that they were the handiwork of Egyptians or the descendants of Egyptians.

It is difficult to at once grasp the stupendous significance of this latter theory once it can be proved a fact beyond dispute. Primarily, it will disclose that the Western Co tinent was discovered centuries and even ages before the date now established by history.

But it may go even further than that, and, taken in connection with archaeological finds being unearthed in the Mexican pyramids, it is possible that we are on the very life of the earth itself, and of the ancient races which inhabited it before the dawn of history.

Of less importance in its possible bearing on the world facts, but highly interesting in its possibilities, is the belief of many that when the pyramids are opened they will be found to contain treasures of fabulous worth, buried there by the ancient inhabitants of Mexico when these vast piles were erected.

Situated only twenty-seven miles from the City of Mexico, the San Juan pyramids, as they are known, long ago aroused the interest of the Mexican Government. Desultory investigation at last led to the belief that excavation might uncover something of value to the world and work was begun some time ago.

As this has progressed great secrecy has been thrown around what was being done and little actual information has heretofore been allowed, to creep out. It is now known, however, that sarcophagi, containing human bones, obsidian knives, terra cotta heads and fragments of rare and costly pottery have been uncovered.

Also it is asserted by persons having certain knowledge of what is being found that the relics of a prehistoric age now being dug up are positively of Egyptian handiwork. Many of the fragments of pottery and the implements and utensils found are similar to those uncovered along the Nile, while scroll work and ornamentation on every hand is distinctly Egyptian. It is hinted, however, that even more specific proof that the San Juan pyramids were built by Egyptians has come into possession of the Mexican Government, but it is being held back for compilation, and verification, and, assuredly, if this is not true, such revelations are expected within a very short time.

While the group is spoken of as the San Juan pyramids, only two of them are attracting extraordinary attention. These are the pyramids of the Moon and the Sun, the latter much the larger of the two.

Mr. J. S. Bartell, Edwardsville, Ill., writes: "A few months ago my kidneys become congested. I had severe backache and pain across the kidneys and hips. Discipline Must Be Preserved.

Gen. Nelson A. Miles tells this story to illustrate the result of carrying military discipline too far. There was a certain colonel, who, in the middle of a campaign, was seized with a sudden ardor about hygiene. He ordered that all the men change their shirts at once.

The order was duly carried out, except in the case of one company, where the privates' wardrobe had been pitiably depleted. The captain of this company was informed that none of his men could change their shirts, since they had only one a piece. When he reported this fact, the colonel hesitated a moment, then said firmly:

"Orders must be obeyed. Let the men change shirts with one another."—Youth's Companion.

"My son Frank Snyder has used Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills for a long time. He never had anything to help him so much for headache. A year ago he came home, and I was down sick with such a dreadful nervous headache. He gave me one of the Anti-Pain Pills, and after while I took another and was entirely relieved. I always keep them in the house now, and gave many away to others suffering with headache."

dated in schools of an adjoining district, it shall be the duty of the directors or controllers of such adjoining districts to make an arrangement by which such pupils may be instructed in the most convenient school of the adjoining district; and the expense of such instruction shall be paid as may be agreed upon by the directors or controllers of such adjoining districts, by resolution or agreement entered upon the minutes of the respective boards.' Section 9 of the same act provides that if all the members of any board of directors or controllers shall refuse or neglect to perform their duties by levying the taxes required by law, and to put or keep the schools in operation so far as the means of the district will admit, 'or shall neglect or refuse to perform any other duty enjoined by law,' the Court of Quarter Sessions may, upon complaint in writing and upon due proof, declare their seats vacant and appoint others in their stead until the next annual election for directors.

"But no statute has been pointed out authorizing the Court of Quarter Sessions to compel, by direct proceeding, the directors to make a contract with the directors of another district such as was decreed in this case. None is referred to in Young vs School Directors of Pymatuning Township, 14 Pa. Dist, Rep's. 573, or in Freeman vs School Directors of Franklin Township 37 Pa. 382. Certainly no such power is given to the Court of Quarter Sessions by the Act of June 28''. 1895, P. L. 413, relative to the establishment, classification and maintenance of high schools, or by the Act of April 3. 1903, P. L. 153, relative to the attendance of children of certain districts upon high schools in other districts, or by the Act of March 16, 1905, P. L. 40, permitting children residing in school districts in which no public high school is maintained to attend the high school in some other district located near their homes and providing for the payment of the cost of tuition and school books, or by the Act of May 2, 1907 P. L. 158, to permit children who reside one and one half miles or more from the nearest school in the district where they reside to attend any more convenient school in any other district.

"These are all of the acts that are referred to in the briefs of the counsel and, as we said, none of them authorize the Court of Quarter Sessions to coerce school directors into entering into such a contract as is contemplated by the petition. The Act of 1854, as has been seen, gives the Court power, under certain circumstances, to remove the directors, and the same power is given, under other circumstances, by the Act of June 6, 1893, P. L. 330 and 339. But this power manifestly does not include the power here claimed, and it is needless to say that it is not included in the general jurisdiction of the Court of Quarter Sessions. We have deemed it important to go into this question, because by reviewing the case on its merits we would seem to be establishing a precedent unwarranted by law. The order is reversed and the whole proceedings are dismissed at the costs of the petitioners."

The opinion and decree of Judge Orvis, reversed by the Superior Court, was as follows:

"The question raised on rule and answer as by deposition is one not free from difficulty. The petitioners are all residents of the school district of Spring Township, and live in the neighborhood of the Borough of Bellefonte, near the northern end of said township. The school directors have established a high school in the village of Pleasant Gap, near the southern end of the township, about five miles distant from Bellefonte. The petitioners have children in attendance both in the lower schools as well as the high school at Bellefonte, and have asked that the defendant school district be directed to pay the cost of their tuition, etc. The defendant school district has practically admitted its liability for such of the petitioners' children as are attending the lower schools in Bellefonte, so that the scope of our inquiry is limited to that of the high school pupils. There are no serious differences as to the facts. It is admitted that those petitioners' children who are now attending the Bellefonte High School would be obliged to go in most instances five miles further to attend the Spring Township High School at Pleasant Gap, but defendant contends that having established a high school within its precinct they are relieved from maintaining any of its children in the high school of any other district, and that, too, without regard to the question of convenience, distance to travel, etc.

"The act of March 16, 1905, and the amending act of May 23, 1907, clearly refer to only such cases where the resident township or school district has not established a high school within its borders, and is therefore relied upon as exclusive of any other position. We cannot, however, agree with this contention. It is true that it was within the discretion of the directors to locate their high school at the southern end of the district, and it is probably true especially as conditions were two years ago, that such a location more nearly met the needs and wishes of the majority of that grade of pupils. It is possibly true at this time that the Pleasant Gap location is still more convenient to the majority of the citizens of the district requiring that grade of school. But to our mind there is nothing inconsistent with the acts just quoted and that of May 2, 1907, which establishes as a criterion the distance of one and a half miles. All of the pupils in question are more than one and a half miles distant from any of the schools that they must attend in Spring Township and this is apparent from the fact that the defendant district has abandoned any disposition to contest the claim of the petitioners as to their younger children; but the act of May 2, 1907, is not limited to any grade or class but expressly is made applicable to the case of "all children." In this particular instance the Bellefonte High School is nearer than even the lower grade schools of Spring Township, but we are inclined to hold that a fair construction of the act would hold that it would apply to the distance from the school that necessarily the particular pupil must attend.

"However, under the decision of our courts and the act of May 8, 1854, there has for many years been a discretionary power in the court even before the passage of these recent acts, and under all the evidence the claims of the petitioners with regard to the high school children strongly appeal to our judicial discretion. The Commonwealth has been so liberal in aiding the local school districts and it has become so manifestly its policy to encourage higher common school education that no court would be justified in too close a verbal construction to interfere or prevent the benefits that were intended to be given to the children of the Commonwealth. It is manifestly much cheaper for the defendant district to pay the actual cost of each of its pupils in the Bellefonte High School that are residing so remotely from its own high school, than to erect and maintain a second high school, for their accommodation. At the same time it would be clearly wrong to deprive these boys and girls of the benefits of the course of study in the high school, or to hold that they shall be prevented unless their parents shall voluntarily in addition to their share of taxes for school purposes pay the cost of their children's tuition. The rule in our opinion should be made absolute.

"And now, to wit, January 2. 1909, rule made absolute.

"By the Court,
"ELLIS L. ORVIS, P. J."

The Crops.

The weather has continued dry throughout the greater part of the grain-growing belt, and this has made for an increased circulation of minimum crop estimates of spring wheat and some concern as to the supply of moisture for corn, says Bradstreet's. Reports from the spring-wheat belt, however, point out that the weather, though dry, has been fairly cool, and that the actual prospect is not greatly changed from a week ago. In Canada, however, the dry weather is claimed to have hurt the wheat and oats crops, and the Canadian northwest yield is placed at 75,000,000 bushels. Reports from the winter-wheat belt of the United States, where the harvest is about completed, point to much better yields than earlier expected. Harvesting of spring wheat has begun before the winter-wheat cutting is finished. Oats are a good crop except in parts of Illinois and Nebraska. Reports from the northwestern hay crop are rather poor, and pastures are reported badly burned. Reflection of these conditions is found in the reports of heavy marketing of live stock at leading western markets, due to present or prospective shortages of feeding stuffs. Dry weather has cut the Wisconsin pea crop short. Forest fires have done damage in Wisconsin, Minnesota, Montana, Washington, Manitoba and British Columbia. Rain is badly needed in eastern Washington, where the spring-wheat crop is light.

Except in central and northern Texas, where rain is needed, the reports from the cotton belt are of a full or excessive supply of moisture. Too much rain is reported in the lower Mississippi valley and thence eastward to the Atlantic coast. Some improvement is noted in the Memphis district, but in Alabama, Georgia and the Carolinas the rainfall is excessive. Georgia reports a month of nearly steady rains, and the state report points to only half a crop. The fields are badly in the grass, and warm, dry weather is imperatively needed.

The Love Story of George V.

"Hardly had the betrothal of Prince George and Princess Mary been announced," says Philip Hume-Forster in the Woman's Home Companion for August, "when the future Queen of England had opportunity to test her sense of duty and her self-control. While the Duke of Clarence had been studying statemanship as heir to the English throne, Prince George had been slowly but surely advancing in the royal navy. As an admiral his flag-ship had been stationed off Malta, and here he had met, wooed and won the beautiful daughter of Admiral Seymour. Before marrying her, Price George had written a formal renunciation of his claims to the throne of England and for a few years had lived very happily with the fair-haired, blue-eyed English wife who flitted from colonial port to colonial port to meet her royal husband. One winter they spent in Bermuda, where they were most popular with both English and American residents.

"When Prince George found himself almost at the foot of the throne through the death of his brother, he realized that it was one thing to renounce the throne and another to have his renunciaton accepted. Queen Victoria and all the political powers behind her insisted upon the annulment of the romantic marriage, so the engagement of Princess Mary and Prince George was shadowed by this ugly cloud. The young princess did not indulge in hysterics. There were no recriminations nor unpleasant scenes for Prince George to endure. As his wife, she believed that she should and would be able to hold his affections, and she went about the task of winning the love of the man whom fate had decided should lead her to the throne. In fact, it was generally felt in England that she was more deeply in love with Prince George than with his unfortunate brother.

"The morganatic wife of Prince George was provided for, it is said, by no less a person than his mother, and since then no shadow of scandal has ever entered the life of the young couple."

STATE TREASURER,
Charles Fred. Wright, of Susquehanna.

SECRETARY OF INTERNAL AFFAIRS,
Henry Houck, of Lebanon.

FOR CONGRESS.

of Bellefonte.

Mr. Tener's Acceptance.

The speech of John K. Tener, in formally accepting the Republican nomination for Governor, inspires in the hearts of all true Republicans the feeling of confidence that the right man has been chosen to lead in the approaching campaign. Devoid of flourishes such as appeal to the galleries, and speaking from the shoulder, as is characteristic of the experienced, capable business man, Mr. Tener demonstrated that he has a broad conception of the importance of the office of Governor and the brains and good common sense to administer that office for the good of all the people.

Mr. Tener is in every sense of the word a business man. He takes the broad view that the administration of the government of Pennsylvania is in fact a business proposition and should be administratered on business lines. This has been and is the view of Governor Stuart, whose administration commands the respect and confidence of men of all parties. Mr. Tener very sensibly says that such a system of administration should be continued and that if elected it will be his purpose to keep the government of the State on strictly business lines. Mr. Tener's high conception of the value of such a course is amply illustrated in his splendid tribute to Governor Stuart.

That he is a close observer and student of questions near to the hearts of the people is made manifest by Mr. Tener in his declarations regarding legislation for the betterment of the individual home. He is interested in the public schools. He wants to see the school laws revised and simplified so that each school boy and girl may receive the best education possible. He wants our country roads improved and a State-wide highway constructed. He stands unequivocally in favor of rigidly enforcing and further perfecting our laws for protecting our food, our water and our general health.

After all, are not subjects such as these of the utmost importance to the welfare of the people of Pennsylvania? The pledge that these subjects shall be kept to the front during his administration means that the interests of the people are not to be pushed to the background. Mr. Tener's declarations refer to constructive legislation. The declaration of the average "reformer" is for destructive legislation. Mr. Tener would build up. The average "reformer" would tear down. Which do you prefer?

The schools are the foundation rock upon which we build the future of our children. Our food supply and our water resources are the keynote to good health. Good health and a thorough education are a priceless asset. It is such subjects that Mr. Tener champions and pledges himself to safeguard and protect.

Before the close of Mr. Tener's administration at Harrisburg we predict that he will occupy a position much similar to that of Governor Stuart. When the latter was a candidate there were some who said that he was more or less unknown and perhaps not experienced enough to become Governor. By his acts at Harrisburg Governor Stuart has silenced every critic of four years ago and commanded the respect and confidence of all. We predict that this will be true, likewise, in the case of Mr. Tener.

VETERANS TRAVEL FREE TO GETTYSBURG, SEPT. 27

State Pays Transportation To And From Dedication On That Date.

WILL BE EVENTFUL TRIP

Every Soldier who Participated in Famous Battle of Gettysburg Entitled to Free Ticket and Reserved Seat at Dedications

Quite a number of Centre County veterans of the Civil war are planning to attend the dedication of the State Memorial, at Gettysburg, on September 27, next. Formal announcement that this date has been designated for the occasion was made several days ago.

All soldiers of Pennsylvania regiments or other organizations which participated in the Battle of Gettysburg will be supplied with free transportation to and from Gettysburg, from the railroad station in Pennsylvania nearest to their respective homes. The transportation will be paid by the State, an appropriation for this purpose having been made by the Legislature. The tickets will be good, going, from September 24 to September 27, and good, returning, to reach the original starting point not later than September 30.

For the general public a special rate of 1½ cents per mile each way will be granted by the railroad companies.

To arrange for railroad tickets for soldiers entitled to free transportation, and to provide seats for them at the dedication, each such soldier is requested to send his full name and post-office address, together with the name of the regiment and company in which he served, to the Gettysburg Battlefield Commission, Post Office Box 533, Philadelphia, Pa.

Guffey on Mr. Berry's Notes.

Political circles are taking a deep interest in the act just revealed that former State Treasurer William H. Berry is under financial obligations to Col. James M. Guffey, the Democratic state leader, for whom a receiver was appointed recently.

At his Chester home Mr. Berry said: "It is true that Col. Guffey has some of my paper, but the transaction is a private matter and not a subject for the newspapers to flaunt, but I suppose they must have the facts. My notes held by Col. Guffey are covered by good collateral in his hands and now that he is the victim of some financial annoyance I have arranged to take care of the paper immediately, which I am able to do."

Mr. Berry declined to divulge the nature of his collateral nor the amount of the notes, and added: "I suppose this matter is being ventilated at this time to discredit me."

Choral Societies Formed.

About one month ago two choral societies consisting of men and women, respectively, were formed in Bellefonte for much the same purpose. These societies are under different management, but the purpose of both is to assemble a chorus of blended voices, so as to be able to take part in any future entertainments. For a long time Bellefonte has needed just such an enterprise. The men's chorus is under the direction of Rev. Dr. J. Allison Platts, and is known as the Bellefonte Male Chorus. It consists of Dr. Platts, R. Russell Blair, Dorsey Hunter, Milan P. Walker, A. Lukenbach, Henry Dickenson, Sr., Rev. C. W. Winey, John M. Bullock, Henry Brown and J. C. Meyer. The ladies choral society is in the charge of Miss Mary Bradley and has the following members: Mrs. R. Russell Blair, Miss Helen Schaeffer, Mrs. Philip Waddle, Mrs. Harry Jenkins, Mrs. George P. Bible, Mrs. Ambrose Schmidt and Miss Bessie Dorworth.

Reformed Reunion.

The Reformed churches of Bellefonte, Lock Haven and Nittany Valley held their annual reunion at Hecla Park on Thursday last. The weather was ideal and the crowd was the largest that ever attended any church picnic at the park. A conservative estimate would make the attendance 1500. The morning's program was mostly devoted to speaking. The several pastors addressed the assemblage in the pavilion, Dr. Schmidt, of this place, presiding. In the afternoon the Bellefonte Reformed church base ball team defeated the Lock Haven and the Hublersburg teams by the scores, 8—1 and 5—1, respectively.

There was a variety of sports and games for the young people. The picnic was a great success and it will go down in the church history as one of the most pleasant events of the year.

A Vivid Portrayal.

"Why, my dear," expostulated Mr. Ponsonby, "I wasn't drunk last night. I was merely imitating a drunk man to fool you."

"Well," sniffed Mrs. Ponsonby, "all I have to say is, if that was an imitation you are wasting your talents in the grocery business. You'd draw $100 a week in vaudeville."

His trip covered the following countries: Hawaii, Japan, China, Phillipines, Borneo, Java, Straits Settlements, Burma, India, Ceylon, Egypt, Palestine, Asia Minor, Turkey, Greece, Italy, Austria, Germany, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Holland, Belgium, France, England, Scotland and Ireland.

Mrs. Calloway is now in America and will be home in a few days.

NARROWLY ESCAPED DROWNING

Raymond Lingle Rescues Miss Harmer at Tyrone Country Club.

Miss Mabel Harmer, of Philadelphia, a sister of Mrs. Harry W. Tate, of this place, narrowly escaped drowning, on Sunday last, at the Tyrone Country Club, near Pennsylvania Furnace. She owes her escape to the bravery of Raymond Lingle, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Lingle, of West Linn Street.

Dr. and Mrs. Tate, Misses Harmer and Daisy Keichline and Raymond Lingle motored to the Tyrone Country Club on Sunday last to spend the day. During the afternoon Miss Harmer and Raymond Lingle went canoeing in the lake nearby the club house. Owing to a sudden agitation of the canoe, Miss Harmer fell into the water. The water was quite deep at that point and the young lady could not swim. She sank twice and was on the point of going down for the third time when Mr. Lingle went to her rescue and half dragged and half floated her to the bank, a distance of about 20 yards. When Mr. Lingle first reached her, the young lady grasped him in a death grip, and for a moment it was feared that both would go under. Mr. Lingle freed one arm and it was in this way that he finally brought Miss Harmer ashore.

Miss Pacini a Bride.

Miss Mary Pacini, of this place, and Louis Miller, of Williamsport, were united in marriage at the Catholic parsonage, on last Saturday afternoon, by Rev. Father Patrick McArdle. Miss Mame Strunk acted as bridesmaid, while Harry Smith, of Williamsport, was groomsman. Following the ceremony, a wedding supper was served at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Winfield Love. The happy young couple departed the same evening for their future home at Williamsport, where Mr. Miller has a very substantial position as a skilled machinist.

Won But Stung.

On last Saturday afternoon the champion base ball team of the Bellefonte Match factory crossed bats with the Hecla Park club and took the Nittany boys into camp to the tune of 7-1. When the Bellefonte boys returned to the mill to dress, they discovered that some person had broken open their suit cases and removed about $17. Theodore McNicholl, Samuel Schultz and William Sagar were the principal losers. The boys won the game, but if they ever get their fingers on that long fingered "gent" it would be a caution.

Hotel Sheffer.

Edgar Sheffer, the new proprietor of the old Lloyd House in Philipsburg, has completely renovated his house both inside and out and will call the place hereafter the "Hotel Sheffer." Mr. Sheffer is a thorough hotel man and will see that his guests get the best of care and "live on the fat of the land." Here's luck to the new landlord.

His crops proved to be exceptionally good, the yield being large and the quality fine and what is more gratifying than any thing else is the fact that George personally supervised the planting, the cultivating and the harvesting.

On last Monday evening Misses Roxana and Helen Mingle entertained a party of girl friends at their home with a lawn fete. The yard was very prettily decorated with electric lights and Japanese lanterns. Choice refreshments were served and the evening was greatly enjoyed. OSCEOLA WINS

Takes Exciting Game from Bellefonte; Score, 6—2.

STANDING OF CLUBS.

	Won	Lost	Pct.
Osceola	12	4	750
Bellefonte	3	6	571
Clearfield	4	9	307
Philipsburg	3	9	250

Bellefonte yesterday lost to the strong Osceola baseball team, the score being 6—2. Today and tomorrow Bellefonte plays at Clearfield.

Osceola's victory yesterday further clinches her hold on first place in the Mountain League.

Philipsburg yesterday defeated Clearfield, 3—0. Philipsburg is playing much better ball since her team has been strengthened and promises to be nearer the top of the league by the end of another week.

The large attendance at the games here on Monday and Tuesday shows that Bellefonte is getting awake to the fact that the home team is exceptionally strong and far superior to that o last year. Following Tuesday's game a meeting of a number of citizens was held to devise ways and means for raising sufficient money to cover the expenses incurred during the present month. The belief was expressed that sufficient pledges of contributions could be secured to defray this month's expenses and that with a continuation of an attendance such as turned out on Monday and Tuesday there would be no doubt about keeping the club in the league to the close of the season.

Managers Cunningham and Harris have signed Martz, the Pine Grove Mills boy, who pitched such good ball for Bellefonte last year. He expects to be in trim in the next few days to excel his splendid record of last year.

Bellefonte won two out of three of the games played on the home ground in the last week. On Friday last Bellefonte defeated Philipsburg, 2—0. On Monday Bellefonte defeated the strong Osceola team, the score being 2—1. On Tuesday Osceola turned the tables on Bellefonte, capturing the game by the score of 3—2. This was an unusually exciting game and kept the large crowd on its toes until the last man was down. Bellefonte led off with one run, but was unable to score again untill the eighth inning, when Carson rapped out a triple and brought in the second run. Bellefonte, however, could not score the necessary additional run and Osceola was safe with a well won victory.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other disease put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Water-Power of United States.

The latest Government reports show that the total development in the United States represents 5,356,680 horse power, the number of wheels being 52,827, or an average development per wheel of about 100 horse power. The State of New York possesses the largest water-power development, the total being 885,862 horse power. It is only proper to state that the Niagara powers on the American side assist in making up this large total. The State ranking second in these developments is California, the total being 465,747 horse power distributed among 1,070 wheels, or an average installation per unit of 436 horse power. The third in rank is Maine, with a total development of 343,000 horse power, generated by 2,797 wheels, averaging 123 horse power.

The reports show further that the total available power of the surveyed portions, including storage possibilities, is about 53,000,000 horse power, and as only about one-fourth the total area of the United States is now surveyed, the available power for the whole United States may reach at least 200,000,000 horse power and probably more. —Engineering Magazine.

To Hold Reunion Aug. 20.

A number of former residents of Centre county who are now among the citizens of Blair, held a meeting Thursday evening at the Palace hotel, Altoona, which was quite well attended. Considerable enthusiasm was evinced on the part of those who were present and that the reunion will be a success goes without saying. Another meeting will be held on the evening of August 3 at which time reports from committees will be heard and final arrangements will be made.----Tyrone Herald.

Exploding Bottle Cuts Arm.

Charles Stover, proprietor of the soft drink bottling works located in the rear of the Bush House, cut his left arm very severely on last Friday evening when he attempted to fill a defective glass bottle with some syrup. The bottling machine is very large and puts a pressure of over 65 pounds on every square inch of the bottle. When Mr. Stover attempted to force the cork into the filled bottle, it exploded violently, breaking the bottle in many pieces and hurling glass all over the room. One piece struck him in the arm and gashed it so nastily that six stitches were required to sew up the wound.

An Ambush For Wasps.

A curiosity in history that must surpass all records has been observed in a garden not far from Aldershot, says the London Mail. A number of wasps were heard buzzing about a particular rhododendron bush. The gardener summoned the owner of the garden, and the two proceeded to slaughter. Within half an hour fifty queen wasps had been killed.

The next day a number more were buzzing under the bush the same fatal but obscure attraction. It was noticed that the wasps were only attracted to this single bush, which is one of the many. A suggested reason is that the flowers were a little further advanced and so more full of honey; but, as a rule, color is almost as strong an allurement as scent or the honey sense.

It is not unusual for a few queen wasps to be killed at this season, when the time for nestmaking is approaching, but this quantity is unparalleled. The experience suggests that the wasp might be exterminated, supposing this to be all desireable, if we all grew specimens of this favored flower. The special fondness of queen wasps for white flowers of particular sorts has been observed before, and some gardeners grow such on purpose, but fifty in half an hour is a new record of slaughter.

The queens were killed by pinching the flower into which they dived and which served as a shroud to the quantity of bodies lying around the deadly ambush of the rhododendron.

Falls From Hay Wagon.

On Wednesday of last week, William Bartley, who resides on East Bishop Street, broke two ribs and was otherwise seriously hurt by falling from a loaded hay wagon, while helping harvest at his son's farm near Jacksonville. Mr. Bartley was driving through the field. While crossing a small bridge, one of the wheels slipped off, and he was thrown to the ground. He was brought to his home at this place and at the present time is resting comfortably.

Get it at Green's

Showing Off.

Your average citizen, for instance, will go through inconceivable effort to indicate what fine material he is made. At the very idea of chopping wood for Mrs. Fenderson on a hot day, Mr. will frown. But get him with a heavy hammer at Coney Island or at any other amusement resort in the country, put him up against an indicator which will indicate to his fellow humans the vast physical possibilities of Mr. Fenderson—and Mr. Fenderson will pay for the privilege of working three times as hard as he would in the infinitely more useful and domestic avocation of chopping wood.

But in the last case, Mrs. Fenderson is the only looker-on. If it were possible to gather an audience while Mr. Fenderson chopped wood and that audience could be induced to think what a wonderful wood chopper Mr. Fenderson was, that amiable gentleman would probably chop it with great industry. This is another phase in the psychology of summer amusements. Knowing the mankind and womankind like to be seen doing things, it becomes the immediate aim and object in life of every amusement promoter to allow mankind and womankind to be seen doing things.—Metropolitan Magazine.

Last Words of Daniel Webster.

The words, "I still live," were not the last spoken by Webster, nor were they spoken under the circumstance you mention. Being very weak, it was ordered by the doctor (in an under tone to the nurse) that "if he still lived at a certain time to give him another spoonful of brandy." At the time designated the illustrious patient exclaimed: "I still live," and pointed over toward the brandy. Dropping in soon after this, the doctor wispered to him the words, "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil," when Webster replied: "No, doctor, I do not fear." Then his mind seemed to wander off to some great argument, and, exclaiming: "Show me the point, show me the point," he passed away.

"BACK TO THE FARM"

II.—Restoring the Balance. Back to the Land.

By C. V. GREGORY.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

WE have seen how the high cost of the necessaries of life and of foodstuffs particularly is the direct result of the townward trend of population. The same cause is responsible for the terrible congestion of population in some parts of the great cities, with the attendant disease and misery.

Such conditions are deplorable, the more so because they are unnecessary. There is enough food in the world for all, enough shelter for all and enough room for all. Men will come to learn—indeed, they are already learning—that they are paying too high a price for the privilege of living in the city. The setting of the tide of population toward the city began when the city possessed some real advantages that were not found in the country. Today this condition is reversed. The current still flows cityward only because of habit. There is a tremendous amount of inertia to be overcome before the direction of the flow of human beings will be reversed, but the day of "about face" is coming.

You may travel for hundreds of miles through the west, where broad arable fields stretch out on every side, with a population of not more than four to the square mile. Even in the fertile Mississippi valley there are but twenty-five people located on each square mile. In the east the country population is more dense, but here there are thousands of quarter sections and eighty acre tracts of land so fertile that ten acres properly tilled mean prosperity.

Contrast this with New York city, with 12,578 people to the square mile, or Chicago, with 11,448. The cities boast of their size and greet each added thousand enthusiastically. As well might a sardine can ask to be packed more tightly. The city is calling for men that it does not need, for which it has no work at living wages and no room without crowding some one else a little closer.

The country is calling for men—calling with the voice of opportunity. There is room for all and to spare. There is a good living for all and a surplus besides. The decentralization of the cities, the movement to the country, means saner, cleaner living. There is less of strife and sordid selfishness out in the open country, where the grass is green and the twitter of song birds replaces the city's din. Children raised in the hayfields make the men of brains and brawn for which the world is calling. Out in the country it is possible for every man to have a home. The humblest laborer can be covered at night by his own cottage roof. The future of the nation depends upon the preservation of a pure and healthy home life, and nowhere can this be so surely attained as in the country.

A higher standard of living is possible to the man in the country. He can build a house for the price of two or three years' rent in the city. He can have fresh vegetables and fresh meat and fresh eggs on the farm that make the canned and cold storage products of the city a disagreeable memory. Forty cent eggs mean doing without to the average city dweller. To the countryman with a small flock of poultry they mean prosperity. The man with his own cow doesn't complain of the high cost of milk and butter, for grass is always cheap.

In the country the everlasting struggle to keep up appearances is not felt so keenly as in the city. The useless extravagance that makes the bill for clothes the heaviest drain on the city man's pocketbook is lacking. Men and women are taken more for what they are worth and less for what they seem to be. The man who lives beyond his income in an effort to appear more than he really is is looked upon with disapproval. In the country the standard of living as it applies to the real things—food, clothing, shelter, books and papers—can be maintained much higher than it can on an equal sized income in the city. The temptations to reckless extravagance are much less, and the margin for saving is consequently much greater.

From the standpoint of the average individual and for a great many who are above the average country life at present is much more desirable in almost every way than city life. Some of the more specific advantages will be taken up in later articles. From the standpoint of the nation an increase in the number of people who till the soil or who live close to it is absolutely necessary. We might find temporary relief by letting down our tariff barriers to the wheat of Canada and the cattle of Argentina, but such relief would be only temporary. The inflow of cheaper meat and bread would but accelerate the growth of the cities. When the limit of the production of Canada and South America was reached we would face another crisis of high prices, this time much more serious than we are undergoing at present. The only way the price level can be permanently adjusted and lasting prosperity assured is by increasing the proportion of country dwellers.

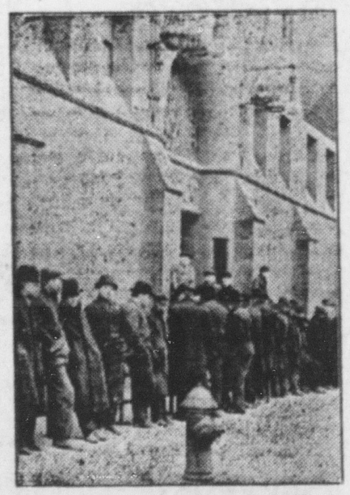
At present there are too many drones in the hives of industry. The unearned increment, the rapid rise in real estate values for which community growth is responsible, has placed hundreds of thousands of people where they can live from the proceeds of rents—live without working. They are granted a perpetual tax upon the industry of others—on the necessity of people to live. Legislation that will put a heavy tax on this unearned increment will in a large measure right this wrong and force the property owners into productive labor. The decentralizing of the cities will force down the abnormally high rents and help to thin the ranks of the people whom excessive rents have allowed to remain in idleness.

Aside from the people who do not work, there is a vast army of nonproducers who are supported by the men who work at productive labor. Our system of getting goods from producer to consumer is needlessly expensive and cumbersome. There are too many middlemen on the way, who through custom have come to think they have a divine right to an easily earned share of the consumer's dollar.

Much of this awkward system of distribution has been made necessary by the concentration of the manufacturing industries in large cities and by the location of these cities without reference to the markets for their manufactured goods or the source of their food supply. It has been estimated that if Philadelphia were located close to its food supply the cost of living in that city would be reduced 20 per cent.

The time has come for a radical readjustment of the system of distribution. The consumer and the producer must be brought closer together and a large share of the energy wasted in duplication and rehandling of products turned into productive labor. As an example, there are nearly 100,000 commercial travelers in this country. These men are well fed and well paid. The cost of selling goods through them is enormous. The consumer pays this cost in increased prices. The plan of selling all sorts of goods in small quantities by personal solicitors is a remnant of the old days of cutthroat competition. It has little, if any, place in modern business. Today business has been put on a scientific basis. Consolidation is the keyword of efficiency. Consolidation has reached its highest development in manufacture. Transportation is not far behind it. It is time that competition—the kind of competition that fosters inefficiency, duplication and excessive cost—is eliminated from the unproductive industries.

In the very nature of the case there must always be a class of unproductive workers. It is for the best good of the nation to limit this class as much as possible.



THE "BREAD LINE" IN NEW YORK.

The future prosperity of America, then, depends upon the decentralization of the cities. Large cities are economically wasteful, and they will have to go. The manufacturing cities of the future will be located with reference to food supply as well as with reference to the market for their products. In recent years the farmers of the hog raising districts of Iowa are coming more and more to ship their hogs to local packing houses for slaughter, thus eliminating the long freight haul to Chicago. A plan is under way to establish a terminal elevator at Cedar Rapids, where the bulk of the Iowa grain can be cleaned and graded and shipped direct to the consumer. In this way the toll of Chicago, with its heavy terminal charges and its army of middlemen, will be almost entirely eliminated.

One of the chief factors in the way of this enterprise and many others of like nature is the discriminatory freight rates which the railroads give to the large cities. But this is a matter that will be remedied in time. The era of the open country and the country town is dawning. The great city has its place, a place which it will continue to hold, but it cannot be the dominating force in American life, nor can it much longer attract the flower of young manhood and young womanhood from the country districts.

Origin of the Elks.

Just after the Civil War there was in New York a certain crowd of young men, for the most part connected in one way or another with the dramatic profession, who met in a room every Sunday night and called themselves the Jolly Corks. One gathers from the existing data regarding this group that performs in the variety theaters of that day predominated in its membership. In a pamphlet issued over the name of one of the charter members of the Elks, the late George W. Thompson, the origin of the order is described. Having attended a meeting of the Jolly Corks at the invitation of one of the regular attendants, he writes:

"I remember we passed a very enjoyable evening and dispersed with an agreement to meet on the following Sunday. Brothers Riggs and McDonald left with me and the latter said: 'This thing is better than a mere jolly crowd and will one day amount to something.'" Metropolitan Magazine.

Some Valuable Suggestions for One Making Her Lingerie.

To the woman who sets out to make her own lingerie costume, some sort of a model, a design or a sketch is of much more importance than a mere pattern.

Any ordinary shirtwaist and seven-gored skirt pattern will answer for the lingerie dress, but it is imperative that there be some sort of design to follow in the trimming, so that the intricate honey combing of lace and embroidery will form the graceful sweep of line which makes the Paris fashioned costumes of this character so beautiful.

The very soft and flimsy materials are the favorites now, and for this reason the dainty dotted Swisses are not as popular for white dresses as they once were. The Swiss must have a little crispness--like the organdie--to look like anything but a rag; and the fashionable clinging effects are best achieved with mull, nainsook or batiste. Indeed, many of these frocks are now weighted, with strings of tiny lead weights sewed in tape casings, to make the soft white dress hang perfectly flat and straight around the limbs.

This is in accordance with the scant dress effects, which are ruling fashion just now. In the first empire the women wore daring frocks of thin mull, hanging perfectly straight about the limbs, without petticoats beneath; and it was at this period that knitted silk undergarments were introduced to make the clinging, contour-revealing lines more emphatic.

Nowadays, however, the petticoat worn beneath the lingerie frock is quite as important as the frock itself, and there should be one or two extra dainty and soft petticoats kept on hand for wear with the sheer white dresses.

These lingerie petticoats are as soft and fine as the frock and no hint of starch must be allowed in the laundering.

One sees many taffeta costumes in black, dark blue and changeable abroad, but although they are all made more or less in the same style, those of black seem for some reason or other, to be smarter.

An excellent model, which one recognized immediately as coming from the workroom of Bechoff-David, had a skirt which was scant and little gored, there being almost as much fullness about the waist as at the lower edge. Here it was finished by a double puff of taffeta.

Hanging from the waist line in front was an extra piece of the material, which looked precisely like a long apron, full and straight. This was plain across the hem, but where it was attached to the underskirt there were long three corner shaped pieces of dull blue silk caught with flat steel buttons.

The coat of this suit was a little apology of an affair, short, with kimono sleeves and unlined.

Puffing trimmed it and on the fronts appeared the same three cornered pieces of silk and steel buttons.

As lace is now enormously in demand as an overskirt material, the thrifty woman who has treasured flounces of chantilly, Spanish thread, gulpure or escurial for the past three decades will find them valuable wardrobe assets.

She will perceive that the lighter meshes will answer perfectly for the upper portion of a chiffon, satin or silk skirt, and the heavier nets as the drapery for a gown of chiffon broadcloth, cashmere de soie or crepe de chine, while a flounce of 40-inch width may be used to veil a skirt of gold or silver cloth, figured or striped satin or worn beneath a looped back robe of satin or silk. GOOSE

The GIRL

◆◆◆◆◆ By ◆◆◆◆◆

HAROLD MacGRATH

Copyright, 1909, by the Bobbs-Merrill Company

That a wooden shoed, simple minded goose girl should plunge monarchs and monarchies into a most mysterious confusion of affairs is a novelty. Yet the lovely Gretchen, the heroine of this fascinating old world novel, did just that, for no one can deny that Ehrenstein is a land of romance. There Carmichael, the dashing young American consul, learned of the dangers of falling in love with a princess; there Herbeck, the wily chancellor, tried a master stroke, evilly designed, to change the history of a throne; there royalty in disguise wandered and plotted and learned to know fellow human beings; there the treacherous Magyar gypsies lurked in the shadows to abduct a princess. And through all the little goose girl trod her lowly way toward a fate that the magic wand of chance had destined she must fill---a fate as amazing as it is fascinating to read about.

CHAPTER I.

SOME IN RAGS.

AN old man clothed in picturesque patches and tatters paused and leaned on his stout oak staff. He had walked many miles that day. His peasant garb rather enhanced his fine head. His eyes were blue and clear and farseeing, the eyes of a hunter or a woodsman.

The afternoon glow of the September sun burned along the dusty white highway. From where he stood the road trailed off miles behind and wound up 500 feet or more above him to the ancient city of Dreiberg.

Across a lofty jumble of barren rock and glacial cleft, now purpling and darkening as the sun mellowed in its decline, lay the kingdom of Jugendheit. By and by his gaze wavered, and one particular patch in the valley, brown from the beating of many ironshod horses, caught and chained his interest for a space. It was the military field, and it glittered and scintillated with squadron after squadron of cavalry.

"The philosophy of war is to prepare for it," mused the old man, with a jerk of his shoulders. "France! So the mutter runs. There is a Napoleon in France, but no Bonaparte." He laughed ironically and cautiously glanced at his watch, an article which must have cost him many and many a potato patch. He stepped forward. He had followed yonder goose girl ever since the incline began. Oft the little wooden shoes had lagged, but here they were, still a hundred yards or more ahead of him.

The little goose girl was indeed tired, and the little wooden shoes grew heavier and heavier, and the little bare feet ached dully, but her heart was light and her mind sweet with happiness. Day after day she had tended the geese in the valley and trudged back at evening alone, all told a matter of twelve miles, and now she was bringing them into the city to sell in the market on the morrow. After that she would have little to do save an hour or two at night in a tavern called the Black Eagle, where she waited on patrons.

Presently there was a clatter of horses, a jingle of bit and spur and saber. Half a dozen mounted officers trotted past. The peasant on the parapet instantly recognized one of the men. He saluted with a humbleness which lacked sincerity. It was the grand duke himself. There was General Ducwitz, too, and some of his staff, and a smooth faced, handsome young man in civilian riding clothes, who, though he rode like a cavalryman, was obviously of foreign birth, an Englishman or an American.

When the cavalcade reached the goose girl the peace of the scene vanished forthwith. Confusion took up the scepter. The silly geese, instead of remaining on the left of the road in safety, straightway determined that their haven of refuge was on the opposite side. Gonk, gonk! Quack, quack! They scrambled, they blundered, they flew. Some tried to go over the horses, some endeavored to go under.

The civilian looked casually at the girl.

"By George!" he exclaimed in English.

"What is it?" asked the duke, gathering up the reins.

"The girl's face. It is beautiful."

The duke, after a glance, readily agreed. "You Americans are always observant."

"Pretty figure, too," said one of the aids, a colonel. But his eye held none of the abstract admiration which characterized the American's.

The goose girl had seen this look in other men's eyes. She knew. A faint color grew under her tan and waned.

The troop proceeded with dust and small thunder and shortly passed the city gates. It traversed the lumpy cobbles of the narrow streets, often crowding pedestrians. One among those so inconvenienced was a youth dressed as a vintner. He was tall, pliantly built, blond as a viking, possessing a singular beauty of the masculine order. He was forced to flatten himself against the wall of a house, his arms extended on either side in a kind of temporary crucifixion. Even then the stirrup of the American touched him slightly. But it was not the touch of the stirrup that startled him. It was the dark, clean cut face of the rider. Once they were by the youth darted into a doorway.

"He? What can he be doing here? No, it is utterly impossible. It is merely a likeness."

He ventured forth presently, none of the perturbation, however, gone from his face. He ran his hand across his chin. Yes, he would let his beard grow.

The duke and his escort turned into the broad and restful sweep of the Konigstrasse. At the end was the Ehrenstein Platz, the great square round which ran the palaces and the royal and public gardens. The halt was made in the courtyard and all dismounted.

The American thanked the duke gratefully for the use of the horse.

"You are welcome to a mount at all times, Mr. Carmichael," replied the duke pleasantly. "A man who rides as well as yourself may be trusted anywhere with any kind of a horse."

The group looked admiringly at the object of this marked attention. Here was one who had seen two years of constant and terrible warfare, who had ridden horses under fire and who bore on his body many honorable scars, for the great civil strife in America had come to its close but two years before and Europe was still captive to her amazement at the military prowess of the erstwhile inconsiderable American.

As Carmichael saluted and turned to leave the courtyard he threw a swift, searching glance at one of the palace windows. Did the curtain stir? He could not say. He continued on, crossing the Platz, toward the Grand hotel. He was a bachelor, so he might easily have had his quarters at the consulate, but as usual with American consulates—even to the present time—it was situated in an undesirable part of the town, over a bierhalle frequented by farmers and the middle class.

Where had he seen that young vintner before?

Meanwhile the goose girl, now joined by the old man, marshaled her geese and proceeded.

"What was that song you were singing before the horses came up?" he asked her.

"That? It was from the poet Heine"—simply.

He stared at her.

"Heine? Can you read?"

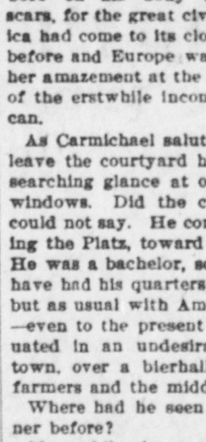
"Yes, herr."

A goose girl who read Heine?

"And the music?" he inquired presently.

"That is mine"—with the first sign of diffidence. "Melodies are always running through my head. Sometimes they make me forget things I ought to remember."

"Your own music? An impresario will be discovering you some fine day, and your fortune will be made."



"I AM ONLY A GOOSE GIRL."

The light irony did not escape her. "I am only a goose girl."

He felt disarmed. "What is your name?"

"Gretchen."

"What else?"

"Nothing else," wistfully. "I never knew any father or mother."

"So? But who taught you to read?"

"A priest. Once I lived in the mountains at an inn. He used to come in evenings when the snow was not too deep. He taught me to read and write. I know that Italy has all the works of art, that France has the most interesting history, that Germany has all the philosophers and America all the money," adding a smile. "I should like to see America."

"Do you live alone?"

"No. I live with my foster mother, who is very old. I call her grandmother. She took me in when I was a foundling. And what might your name be?"

"Ludwig. I am a mountaineer from Jugendheit."

"We are not friendly with your country."

"More's the pity. It is a grave blunder on the part of the grand duke."

"Wasn't it all about the grand duke's daughter?"

"Yes. But she has been found. Yet the duke is as bitter as of old. What is this new found princess like?"

"She is beautiful and kind."

The geese were behaving, and only occasionally was she obliged to use her stick.

He observed her critically, for he was interested. She was not tall, but her lithe slenderness gave her the appearance of tallness. Her hands, rough nailed and sunburnt, were small and shapely. Her hair, in a thick braid, was the tone of the heart of a chestnut bur, and her eyes were of that mystifying hazel, sometimes brown, sometimes gray.

"How old are you, Gretchen?"

"I do not know," she answered, "perhaps eighteen, perhaps twenty."

Arriving at length in the city, they passed through the crooked streets.

"Gretchen, where shall I find the Adlergasse?"

"I will show you. You are also a stranger in Dreiberg?"

"Yes."

They took the next turn, and the weather beaten sign Zum Schwartzen Adler, hanging in front of a frame house of many gables, caused the mountaineer to breathe gratefully.

"Here my journey ends, Gretchen, at the Black Eagle," he said.

They were passing a clock mender's shop. The man from Jugendheit peered in the window, but there was no clock in sight to give him warning of the time, and he dared not now look at his watch. He had a glimpse of the ancient clock mender himself, however, huddled over a table upon which sputtered a candle. The eyes of the two men met, but only for a moment. The mountaineer started to cross the street to the tavern.

"Good night, Gretchen. Good luck to you and your geese tomorrow."

"Thanks, Herr Ludwig. And will you be long in the city?"

"That depends; perhaps," adding a grim smile in answer to a grim thought.

He offered his hand, which she accepted trustfully. He was a strange old man, but she liked him. When she withdrew her hand something cold and hard remained in her palm. Wonders of all the world, it was a piece of gold! Her eyes went up quickly, but the giver smiled reassuringly and put a finger against his lips.

"But, herr," she remonstrated.

"Keep it. I give it to you. Do not question Providence, and I am her handmaiden just now. Go along with you."

So Gretchen in a mild state of stupefaction turned away. Clat-clat! sang the little wooden shoes. A plaintive gonk rose as she prodded a laggard from the dank gutter. A piece of gold! Clat-clat! Clat-clat! Surely this had been a day of marvels.

She was regarded with kindly eyes till the dark jaws of the Krumerweg swallowed up both her and her geese.

"Poor little goose girl!" he thought. "If she but knew she could make a bonfire of a thousand hearts. A fine day!" He eyed again the battered sign. It was then that he discerned another leaning from the ledge of the first story of the house adjoining the tavern. It was the tarnished shield of the United States.

"Two weeks tramping about the country in this unholy garb, following false trails half the time, living on crusts and cold meats! Ah, you have led me a merry dance, nephew, but I shall not forget!"

He entered the tavern and applied for a room, haggling over the price.

The nights were chilly. Carmichael in order to finish his cigar on the little balcony fronting his window found it necessary to put on his light overcoat, though he perfectly knew that he was in no manner forced to smoke on the balcony. But the truth was he wanted a clear vision of the palace and the lighted windows thereof and of one in particular. He had no more sense than Tom Fool, the abetter of follies. She was as far removed from him as the most alien of the planets, but the magnet shall ever draw the needle, and a woman shall ever draw a man. He knew that it was impossible, that it grew more impossible day by day, and he railed at himself bitterly and satirically.

He sighed and teetered his legs. Carmichael sighed for the Princess Hildegarde, understanding. It was sigh or curse, and the latter mode of expression wastes more vitality.

Arthur Carmichael was Irish. He was born in America, educated there and elsewhere—a little while in Paris, a little while at Bonn—and, like all Irishmen, he was baned with the wandering foot, for the man who is homeless by choice has a subtle poison in his blood. He was at Bonn when the civil war came. He went back to America and threw himself into the fight with all the ardor that had made his forbears famous in the service of the worthless Stuarts. It wasn't a question with him of the mere love of fighting, of tossing the penny. He knew with which side he wished to fight. He joined the cavalry of the north and hammered and fought his way to a captaincy. He was wounded five times and imprisoned twice. At the end of the conflict he returned to Washington.

Without any influence whatever save his pleasing address and his wide education he blarneyed the state department out of a consulate. They sent him to Ehrenstein at a salary not worth mentioning, with the diplomatic halo of dignity as a tail to the kite. Two years in any one place was not in reckoning as regarded Carmichael, yet here he was, caring neither for promotion nor exchange. So, then, all logical deductions simmered down to one—cherchez la femme.

The dreamer is invariably tripping over his illusions, and Carmichael was rather boyish in his dreams. What absurd romances he was always weaving round her! What exploits on her behalf! But never anything happened, and never was the grand duke called upon to offer his benediction.

It was all very foolish and romantic and impossible, and no one recognized this more readily than he. No American ever married a princess of a reigning house, and no American ever will. This law is as immovable as the law of gravitation. Still, man is master of his dreams, and he may do as he pleases in the confines of this small circle.

"How the deuce will it end?" musing half aloud. "I'll forget myself some day and trip so hard that they'll be asking Washington for my recall. I'll go over to the gardens and listen to the band."

He was standing in front of the hotel when he noticed a closed carriage hard by the fountain in the Platz.

"Ha, a fare!"

A woman in black, thoroughly veiled and cloaked, came round from the opposite side of the fountain. She spoke to the driver. The lady stepped into the carriage, the driver woke up his ancient Bucephalus and went clickety-clack down the Konigstrasse toward the town. To Carmichael it was less than an incident. He twirled his cane and walked toward the public gardens. The band struck up again, and he drifted with the crowd toward the pavilion.

Within a dozen feet of him, her arms folded across her breast, her eyes half shut in the luxury of the senses, stood the goose girl. He smiled as he recalled the encounter of that afternoon. It was his habit to ride to the maneuvers every day, and several times he had noticed her and her beauty.

"Why couldn't I have fallen in love with some one like this?" he cogitated.

Colonel von Wallenstein of the general staff approached her from the other side. Wallenstein was a capital soldier and a jolly fellow round a board, but beyond that Carmichael had no real liking for him. There were too many scented notes stuck in his pockets.

The colonel dropped his cigarette, leaned over Gretchen's shoulder and spoke a few words. At first she gave no heed. The colonel persisted. Without a word in reply she resolutely sought the nearest policeman. Wallenstein, remaining where he was, laughed. Meantime the policeman frowned. His excellency could not possibly have intended any wrong. The law of redress in Ehrenstein had no niche for the goose girl.

"Good evening, colonel," said Carmichael pleasantly. "Why can't your bandmaster give us light opera once in awhile?"

The colonel pulled his mustache in chagrin.

"Light operas are rare at present," he replied, accepting his defeat amiably enough.

And then a pretty woman rose from a chair near by. She nodded brightly at the colonel, who bowed, excused himself to Carmichael and made off after her.

Carmichael looked round for Gretchen. She was still at the side of the policeman. She came back.

"Did you get your geese together without mishap?" he asked of her.

The instinct of the child always remains with the woman. Gretchen smiled. This young man would be different, she knew.

"They were only frightened."

"We don't have goose girls in America," he said.

The magic word America, where the gold came from, flamed her curiosity.

"You are from America?" she asked.

"Yes."

"Are you rich?"

"In fancy, in dreams," humorously.

"Oh, I thought they were all rich. Did you fight in the war?"

"Yes. Do you like music?"

"Were you ever wounded?"

"A scratch or two. But do you like music?"

"Very, very much. When they play Beethoven, Bach or Meyerbeer—ach, I seem to live in another country. I hear music in everything—in the leaves, the rain, the wind, the stream."

It seemed strange to him that he had not noticed it at first, the almost Hanoverian purity of her speech and the freedom with which she spoke. The average peasant is ignorant, diffident, with a vocabulary of few words.

"What is your name?"

"Gretchen."

"It is a good name. It is famous too."

"Goethe used it."

"So he did." Carmichael ably concealed his surprise.

He was willing to swear that she was making fun of him. Was she a simple goose girl? Was she not something more, something deeper? War clouds were forming in the skies. They might gather and strike at any time. And who but the French could produce such a woman spy? Ehrenstein was not Prussia, it was true, but the duchy, with its 20,000 troops, was one of the many pulses that beat in unison with this man Bismarck's plans. He was certainly puzzled, but a glance at her hands dissolved his doubts. These hands were used to toil. They were in no way disguised.

"You have been to school?"

"After a manner. My teacher was a kind priest. But he never knew that, with knowledge, he was to open the gates of discontent."

"Then you are not happy with your lot?"

"Is any one, herr?" quietly. "And who might you be and what might you be doing here in Dreiberg, riding with the grand duke?"

"I am the American consul."

Gretchen took a step back.

"What did Colonel Wallenstein say to you?" he asked.

"Nothing of importance. I am used to it. I am perfectly able to take care of myself," she answered.

"What did the policeman say?"

"What would he say to a goose girl?"

"Shall I speak to him?"

"Would it really do any good?" skeptically.

"It might. The duke is friendly toward me, and I am certain he would not tolerate such conduct in his police. My name is Carmichael. Now, listen, Gretchen—if at any time you are in trouble you will find me at the Grand hotel or at the consulate next door to the Black Eagle."

"I shall remember. Sometimes I work in the Black Eagle."

"Good night," he said.

Gretchen extended her hand, and Carmichael took it in his own, inspecting it.

"It is a good hand. It is strong too," he said.

"It has to be strong, herr. Good night."

Carmichael raised his hat again, and Gretchen breathed contentedly as she saw him disappear in the crowd. Suddenly she felt an arm slip through hers. Her head went round.

"Leo?" she whispered.

It was the young vintner whom Carmichael had pushed against the wall that day.

"Who was that?" he asked.

"Herr Carmichael, the American consul."

"Carmichael!" he gasped.

"What is it, Leo?"

"Nothing, only I grow mad with rage when any of these gentlemen

"IT MIGHT. THE DUKE IS FRIENDLY TOWARD ME."

speak to you. Gentlemen! I know them all to well. Ah, how I love you!"

Gretchen thrilled.

"To me the world began but two weeks ago. I have just begun to live," he whispered warmly.

"I am sad and lonely tonight," she said gloomily.

"Why, indeed!"

"Leo, as much as I love you, there is always a shadow."

"What shadow?"

"It is always at night that I see you rarely in the bright daytime. What do you do during the day? It is not yet vintage. What do you do?"

"Will you trust me a little longer, Gretchen, just a little longer?"

CHAPTER II.

FOR HER COUNTRY.

"COUNT, must I tell you again not to broach that subject? There can be no alliance between Ehrenstein and Jugendheit."

"Why?" asked Count von Herbeck, chancellor.

"One of my reasons is that I do not want any alliance with a country so perfidious as Jugendheit. What! I make overtures—I, who have been so cruelly wronged all these years? You are mad."

"But what positive evidence have you that Jugendheit wronged you?"

"Positive? Have I eyes and ears? Have I not seen and read and heard?"

"Your highness knows that I look only to the welfare of the country. In the old days it was a foregone conclusion that this alliance was to be formed. Now, you persist in averring that the late king was the chief conspirator in abducting her serene highness, aided by Arnsberg, whose successor I have the honor to be. I have never yet seen any proofs. Show me something which absolutely convicts them and I'll surrender."

"On your honor?"

"My word."

The duke struck a bell.

"My secretary and tell him to bring me the packet marked A. He will understand."

The duke was frank in his likes and dislikes. He hated secrets, and he loved an opponent who engaged him in the open. It was this extraordinary rectitude which made the duke so powerful an aid to Bismarck in the days that followed. The man of iron needed this sort of character as a cover and a buckler to his own duplicities.

Herbeck was an excellent foil. He was as silent and secretive as sand. He moved, as it were, in circles, thus always eluding dangerous corners. He was tall, angular, with a thin, immobile countenance, well guarded by his gray eyes and straight lips. He was a born financier, with almost limitless ambition, though only he himself knew how far this ambition reached. Twice had he saved Ehrenstein from the dragnet of war and with honor.

The secretary came in and laid a thin packet of papers on the chancellor's desk.

The secretary bowed and withdrew.

The duke stirred the papers angrily, took one of them and spread it out with a rasp.

"Look at that. Whose writing, I ask?"

"FORGERY!" ROARED THE DUKE.

Herbeck ran over it several times. At length he opened a drawer in his desk, sorted some papers and brought out a yellow letter. This he laid down beside the other.

"Yes, they are alike. This will be Arnsberg. But"—mildly—"who may say that it is not a cunning forgery?"

"Forgery!" roared the duke. "Read this one from the late king of Jugendheit to Arnsberg then if you still doubt."

Herbeck read slowly and carefully. Then he rose and walked to the nearest window, studying the letter again in the sharper light.

Herbeck returned to his chair. "I wish that you had shown me these long ago. You accused the king?"

"Certainly, but he denied it."

"In a letter?"

"Yes. Here, read it."

Herbeck compared the two. "Where did you find these?"

"In Arnsberg's desk," returned the duke—"Arnsberg, my boyhood playmate, the man I loved and trusted and advanced to the highest office in my power. Is that not the way? Well, dead or alive, 10,000 crowns to him who brings Arnsberg to me dead or alive."

"You are very bitter," said Herbeck.

"And have I not cause? Did not my wife die of a broken heart, and did I not become a broken man? You do not know all, Herbeck—not quite all. Franz also sought the hand of the Princess Sofia. He, too, loved her, but I won. Well, his revenge must have been sweet to him."

"But your daughter has been restored to her own."

"Due to your indefatigable efforts alone. Ah, Herbeck, nothing will ever fill up the gap between, nothing will ever restore the mother." The duke bowed his head.

Herbeck opened another drawer and took forth a long hood envelope crested and sealed.

"Your highness, here is a letter from the prince regent of Jugendheit formally asking the hand of the Princess Hildegarde for his nephew Frederick, who will shortly be crowned. My advice is to accept, to let bygones be bygones."

"Write the prince that I respectfully decline."

"Do nothing in haste, your highness. Temporize. Say that you desire some time to think about the matter. You can change your mind at any time. A reply like this commits you to nothing, whereas your abrupt refusal will only widen the breach."

"The wider the breach the better."

"No, no, your highness; the past has disturbed you. We can stand war, and it is possible that we might win, even against Jugendheit, but war at this late day would be a colossal blunder. Victory would leave us where we began thirty years ago. And an insult to Jugendheit might precipitate war."

"Have your way, then."

The duke departed, stirred as he had not been since the restoration of the princess. He sought his daughter. She was in the music room. "My child," he began, taking Hildegarde's hand and drawing her toward a window seat, "the king of Jugendheit asks for your hand."

"Then I am to marry the king of Jugendheit?" There was little joy in her voice.

"Ah, we have not gone so far as that! The king, through his uncle, has simply made a proposal."

"It is for you to decide, father. Whatever your decision is I shall abide by it."

"It is a hard lesson we have to learn, my child. We cannot always marry where we love. Diplomacy and politics make other plans. But fortunately for you you love no one yet, and the king is young, handsome, they say, and rich. Politically speaking, it would be a great match."

"I am in your hands. You know what is best."
